Our Story

Serendipity describes the Lawrence Dunham Vineyards' evolution. As professional community and strategic planners, the owners' careers focused on helping governments and corporations develop and implement successful community, economic, and organizational plans. This background reinforced the importance of having a strong game plan but experience taught them not to get stuck in that plan and to be open to the possibilities of where life will lead. That has meant a vineyard estate in southeastern Arizona making hand-crafted, quality wines.

As long-time wine collectors, the magic of the grape to glass journey as well as the deep connection winemakers and grape growers have to their land and their love of making something truly exceptional has always been the draw. The personal connection, passion, and commitment of winemakers and growers have to their craft is what Lawrence Dunham Vineyards strives to emulate.

The connection to the land inspired the Lawrence Dunham Vineyards' logo and winemaking philosophy. The property has supported people for thousands of years based on the area history and geology as well as the artifacts found in Ash Creek that cuts our 40-acre parcel. The corn and squash that supported original inhabitants are now grapes. Every summer when the monsoon rains come squash still grows in the vineyard and along the creek. The grapes are grown as sustainably as possible. If care for the land, vineyards, and environment is taken, a quality product will be the result while nourishing this special place for the next ten generations.
